Market Research: Healthcare Industry in Canada

The Canadian health care system’s structure is primarily dictated by the country’s constitution, wherein the federal government, along with provincial and territorial governments, shares roles and responsibilities (Government of Canada, 2019). The delivery of health and social services falls mainly under the jurisdiction of provincial and territorial governments, while the federal government assumes some service delivery responsibilities for specific population groups (Government of Canada, 2019).

Fill-in the form below to get your free report!

Notice: JavaScript is required for this content.